

Society News and Chat

THE return to America of Representative and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth is now being eagerly anticipated by society people in the various Northern resorts, which the former Miss Roosevelt and her husband will doubtless visit. There are scores of invitations for them to go to Newport, where they have many friends and where Mrs. Longworth, as Alice Roosevelt, had such a jolly time two summers ago. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Golet, the latter one of Mrs. Longworth's closest friends, are there, as well as many other hostesses who formerly entertained the President's daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. Longworth are now in Paris as the guests of the Count and Countess de Chambrun, the latter a sister of Mr. Longworth. When their visit to Paris is concluded they will go for a short tour of some of the larger cities of the Continent, and, if their original plans hold, will sail for New York on August 1.

The Minister from Norway and Mme. Hauge are conspicuous among the social colony at Bar Harbor, where they are established at Reverie Cove. Mme. Hauge's stately carriage and handsome gowns make her a conspicuous figure, and her charming personality and vivacity have placed her among the bright particular social stars of that resort. Mme. Hauge is a brilliant conversationalist, and, whether at home or abroad, is always to be found the central figure of an interesting group of men and women.

Society may always look to the resourceful hostesses of Newport to offer at least one novelty a season, whether it be in the matter of dinner giving or of some unique entertainment which has not heretofore found place in the calculations of other hostesses.

It remains, however, for Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont to conceive an idea which will undoubtedly find favor among other women with eligible juniors in their household.

Mrs. Belmont will formally present her son, Harold Vanderbilt, to society next month, when she will give a magnificent ball at Marble House. Harold Vanderbilt is regarded as one of the handsomest boys in Newport, and rumor has it that he is heart whole and fancy free, so that his "coming out ball" promises to interest the entire younger contingent at this fashionable resort. Having no daughter to bring out, Mrs. Belmont has concluded that sex should be no bar to these formal debut parties when there is youth, happiness, and a good time at stake.

In this custom Mrs. Belmont will doubtless take the lead in bringing into vogue one which has long obtained in England and other foreign countries and which gives the sons of the family a social prominence equal to that of their sisters. Harold Vanderbilt is the brother of Consuelo, Duchess of Marlborough, and of William K. Vanderbilt, Jr.

This is a blue summer, and the young girl who cannot affect becoming gowns and hats in any one of the various shades of this most accommodating color is indeed unfortunate. Blue is everywhere; light, dark, and intermediate shades may be counted in a hundred things among a girl's wardrobe. At the various resorts this is especially noticeable in the matter of veils. The double veil had not worn itself out, and usually the outer veil is of one of the light shades of blue, fetchingly arranged so that one may really forgive a pretty girl for hiding her charms in this attractive way.

A fashion which has become quite the rage this season among the younger lovers of driving and motoring would appear to be rather a severe one, but which is really quite charming. It was introduced in Newport the other day by Miss Kathryn Lawrence, one of the popular girls of that exclusive social center. Miss Lawrence appeared driving in a chic basket phaeton and wearing a large Panama hat with the entire front turned up and caught at the crown with hatpins. Her example has been generally followed, and now half the girls in Newport are wearing Panamas fashioned after that of Miss Lawrence.

The Japanese Ambassador and Viscountess Aoki are anticipating an early visit from their daughter, the Countess Hatzfeldt. The viscountess before her marriage to the ambassador was the widow of a German nobleman and met the viscount while he was serving as Japanese minister to Berlin. The viscountess is an exceptionally intelligent woman and speaks English almost as perfectly as her native tongue.

An interesting bit of gossip has reached Washington in a dispatch that Mrs. Conger, wife of the former American minister to China, purposes building a home in Pasadena, Cal., which is not only to be an unusually pretty house, but will also serve as a lasting reminder of the years she spent in the land of the Celestials.

It is said that Mrs. Conger once bought a rug from a Chinaman in the streets of Peking. She paid $50 for the rug and brought it to America with the manifest intention of keeping it as one of the many souvenirs she had collected in the East. However, a wealthy man of Chicago one day saw the rug and recognizing it as the finest points of the Chinese art in embroidery, he bought the rug from Mrs. Conger for $7,000 and it is with the proceeds of this rather unique sale that Mrs. Conger will build her new home.
